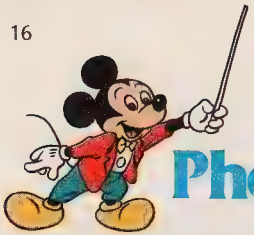

Photo Tips

Tips for better Walt Disney World pictures

Before you shoot

1. Make sure your camera is clean. Clean the lens by first blowing off the dust, then moistening and wiping gently with a soft tissue. Clean the inside of the camera by blowing out any dust; wipe the picture-taking rollers of instant cameras.
2. Make sure your film is fresh. The expiration date is stamped on the box.
3. Check the batteries and battery contacts, a large cause of picture-taking failure. (Note: This is not necessary in Polaroid SX-70, Pronto and OneStep cameras because a fresh battery is contained in each SX-70 film pack.)
4. If you think your camera isn't working properly, don't waste film or flash. Visit the Polaroid Camera Center, Main Street, U.S.A., for advice and/or the loan of a Polaroid OneStep camera.

When you shoot

1. Stand so that the light falling on the subject comes from behind you, or from the side. With Polaroid Sun Cameras you don't have to worry about where the sun is.
2. When in doubt about the light, use flash*, keeping in mind the maximum flash range of the camera. With some cameras (Polaroid SX-70 type cameras, for example), you can automatically blend flash with daylight to soften deep shadows and improve pictures made in the shade or against the light.
3. Don't attempt a picture closer than about 4 feet, or a flash picture farther than about 12 feet, except with extended-range 35mm and SX-70 cameras.

4. Try to fill the viewfinder with as much of the subject as possible. The larger the subject, the more interesting your picture will be!
5. Keep the background simple. Try to avoid distracting objects in the foreground and background objects that appear to "grow out" of the subject.
6. Hold the camera steady. Gently squeeze the shutter button; do not "punch" the button.

 Flash photography is not permitted in any Walt Disney World indoor attraction.

Take good scenics by keeping them clean and simple . . . include something in the foreground for interest and dimension.

Tips for better Walt Disney World movies

1. Check the batteries in your camera. If you are going to film more than one cassette, it's good to have spare batteries with you.
2. You can create more interesting movies by thinking of a "theme" in advance — "A Tour Down Main Street, U.S.A.," "Our Visit to Discovery Island," or "Shootin' the Rapids at River Country," for example. With planning, you'll find the 3-minute average cassette length just about right.

Let action help make your pictures interesting. And remember to use flash when trying to stop action, or anytime the light is dim.

3. Shoot with the sun behind you or to your side. If you shoot into the sun, you'll probably fool the camera's electric eye and the scene will end up too dark.

4. Try to have all your subject matter lit evenly. Otherwise, very bright or dark areas may fool the electric eye and result in an over- or under-exposed scene.

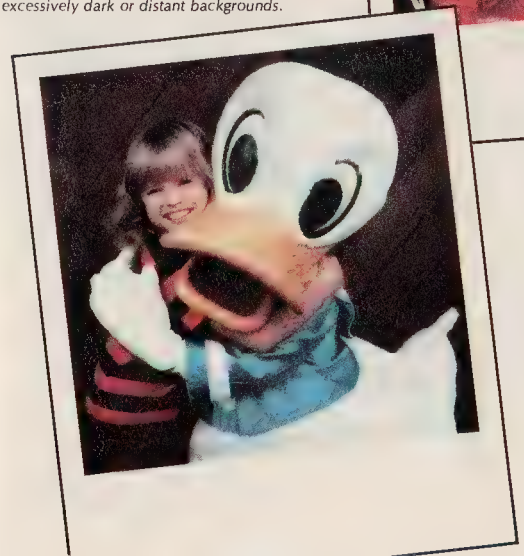
5. Use the zoom lens sparingly and only when it contributes to the scene. Too much zooming in and out will be distracting to your viewers.

6. Move the camera sideways (panning) very slowly (about half as fast as you're inclined). If you pan too fast, your movie will appear blurred.

7. Shoot each scene for at least 5 seconds. Be sure to include "establishing shots" (overall views, signs, etc.) as well as family action.

Move in for good people pictures. Details and expressions will be sharper and clearer.

Keep the background simple and complimentary. For flash pictures avoid excessively dark or distant backgrounds.



8. If you are using a Polavision instant movie camera, be sure to take your cassette to the Polaroid Camera Center where you can view the movies you took today on the spot.

More picture and movie-making help — as well as film, flash and free Polaroid cameras on loan — is available from the Polaroid Camera Center, Main Street, U.S.A.
